DEDICATION

To my father, Charles Bradley, who broke trail and set the pace.

And to my brothers-in-arms of the 70s. How glorious to gather our stories. Even more, how fortunate we are to have had, and seized, that opportunity. If progressive history happens in pulses, the years 1965–1980 were a sustained beam of light. I assumed at the time that this level of creativity and inspiration could be maintained, and would continue to be our way of life. Looking back, I now see it was a rare moment when the stars really did line up—the right history, the right leadership, the right Montana mindset. The only question that haunts me is whether we did justice to those momentous issues. Usually, in the light of dawn, looking out at the beauty of the Crazy Mountains, I conclude that we thrashed our way pretty honorably. May the next round of warriors be so steadfast.
